A Real Minstrel Show.

In spite of the fact that Lew Dockstader offers no big company, no elaborate and pretentious effects, no strips of tinsel of many colors, no brave sailor boys waving faggs at mighty battleships tossing on raging canvas seas, no scenes at the bottom of a glass ocean, nor any other of the conventional spectacles of modern minstrelsy, he has put the minstrel show that kept a packed, happy house roaring with laughter last night from the first comic song to the startlingly absurd finale of the closing skit. Indeed, he has gone back to nature—that is, minstrel nature—in a manner that delighted many of us who had grown a-weary of the acrobats, juggiers, gorgeous and dirty coetunes, and glaringly dinney settings of the new idea.

The Equal Suffrage League of Virginia made a show of strength at the hearing, of which the leaders were proud. The interest was intense. While some came from curiosity, it was evident that the great majority was in hearty sympathy with the move for equal suffrage.

Mrs. B. B. Valentine, president of the league, introduced the speakers. She said briefly that women are classed in Virginia with the idiot, the lunatic and the criminal as being unworthy of the Virginia with the idiot, the lunatic and the criminal as being unworthy of the bullot. She asked the men if they would feel free had they to go to women for their laws and for their education. She made the statement that the petitions filed did not represent the entire demand for woman suffrage, for many women are afraid to sign, being in mental subjection to employer or husband or father.

Miss Johnston Speaks.

Miss Mary Johnston spoke of the changes of modern days. "But in the midst of all this change of status," is she said, "so general, so recognized, so welcomed, there appears to exist, in a number of minds, a stony objection to any change in the status of woman. She, alone of all organisms, i sto be unaffected by any changes of environment. She alone is to stand, like Lot's wife, unadapted and unadaptable. She alone is to preserve the equilibrium of the Dark Ages in the midst of the electric light of the twentieth century. She is to travel by ox cart, while you, gentlemen, take the airship. She alone is not to follow her inner voics which says: "For mot grow. We will do the growing for both."

Rev. E. S. Hinks, of Warrenton, told of the good effects in John, where he lived and where women vote.

Popular and Representative.

Mrs. John H. Lowis, of Lynchburg, went into definitions of popular government, to show that it means the whole body of the people and not a part. "Half the community," she said, "has never bestowed the authority to represent it on snybody. Our representatives, so-called, only represent a select portion of the community, instead, of the whole people, notwithstanding the fact that a popular government, such as ours claims to be, should domand the assent of the 'whole body of the people."

"It would seem to an unbiased mind that this assumption of representation of the whole community by one-half of its members is an act of flagrant and open injustice. Who decreed that one-half the inhabitants of a country—a half fully equal in labor and intelligence and patriotism to the other half—should be utterly ignored in the framing of the laws which govern their lives? Is that the spirit of a republic?"

The labor representatives—H. T. Colvin, of Alexandria, and E. C. Davison, secretary of the State Federation of Labor, were well received. They said that organized labor demands the bailot for women.

Hill Montague closed the debate. He said his political and professional future had been doubted if he advocated this measure, but that he would do his duty without regard to such whisperings. He told of leaders of thought who favor woman suffrage, and asked that the inevitable action toward enfranchisement be taken now.
